Electricity The following are the meaning of each of the simple words mentioned below. Watt (watt, Watt, wat.): In science, the name for the unit of power or the amount of work done per second. It is the amount of work needed to produce one volt of electric potential difference. One watt, being a unit of power, is equal to about 0.0196 joules per second. (See also ampere.) Volts (volt, volts): The difference in electric potential between two points that is equal to one watt per second. Volts are typically expressed as a positive (+) number, measured in millivolts, and are often represented by the letter V. The unit of a volts is given as a positive number, measured in millivolts. Amp (amp, amp, amp., amp- "AA battery": An electric current measurement unit of one "ampere" = one unit of current per volt, not 1000 nanoamperes or 10^{-9} . Should you need any more information

-the game's story is inspired by the Fables The Fall of the House of Erebonia -the audio is remastered and rendered with new sounds and environments -frantic theme "There is no high, there is no low. There is only danger, and life. And only we can save the world from the evil that haunts it." CATO IS STILL ALIVE UNTIL THE END AND CAN'T BE KILLED AND DIED YET! But if you want CATO TO BE KILLED THEN YOU MUST KILL HIM! So if you want to kill him, you will have to find him! You can find him either in CABIN or in SECRET CAVE, but you have to make sure you will find him in one of those places. "You must beat the game twice." Bruno, an old man who has spent most of his life in the forest, has run for his life when the soldiers of a nearby town invaded his home. Now the alien race have landed and terrorize the peaceful town with random acts of violence. Bruno, his best friend Kenji and a handful of townspeople form a resistance group and plan to defend their tiny town against the alien invaders. What's new:

: A Guide to the Buzzes Planning the Next Great Adventure to Space As he contemplated his next step in life, Jason Rhodes looked to his father for inspiration. Like him, Rhodes was a blue-collar guy, living a hardscrabble life just outside of Pittsburgh. By age 10, he had even taken over his father's carpentry business. His father, Mike, was the city's finest carpenter. But Joe Rhodes was the type of guy who still hung around the local Chuck E. Cheese to earn pizza money while building magic tricks. "My dad made sure I had the best," says Rhodes. "I had some great friends, a lot of people I can look up to. So looking back, I think it was just time for something bigger." Of course, dreams of going to space were on the larger, cosmic scale than their humble little block in the North Hills. While Joe Rhodes was busy fly fishing and building ships for his Wood Street Dynamics (WSD) Company, his son would spend long hours daydreaming of becoming an astronaut. "That was our family dream all along," Rhodes says. "When I was little I talked about these trips with my dad. I always had this guy looking up and saying, 'We'll get there someday.'" He's on his way. A veteran of NASA's Space Flight Ambassadors program, Rhodes has recently earned astronaut training and will next month be part of the new Commercial Crew Program, a venture in which private companies will conduct flights to the International Space Station. Aboard his next spaceship, the flight is poised to take Rhodes not only to the space station but deep into science. To do that, though, he needs to be fully trained. And he's starting that training now, today. A recent graduate of Stanford University with a degree in mechanical engineering, Rhodes hopes to devote his career to flying robotic spacecraft that explore Mars. That began two years ago, when he started working at his family company. There Rhodes wrangled with an elusive piece of equipment. It was the engine system of a single-stage-to-orbit rocket called the X-34, which made him think of going to space. "Up to that point, the idea had always been that I would work with the famous names," he says. "My dream was a bit different.
