The Traveller's shuttle to Marduk is damaged during an attack by raiders, forcing it to crash-land far from civilisation. With night falling and little prospect of immediate rescue the Travellers will be forced to seek shelter in nearby ruins, where they discover they are not alone. If the Travellers can just survive one night on Marduk, rescue will surely come. At worst they face a three-way fight for survival. or perhaps they can befriend the xenophobic survivors and team up against the raiders. What might the outcome of such an alliance be? What's new:

Hello everyone. My name is Chris. I'm a long-time Magic player with a two-year break from League of Legends. My MTG knowledge has been on a long rise since playing ET, but I first started playing Magic on the iPad and haven't stopped since. I'm a mono red control player with a few blue spells (although I almost always play mono red with red as well). At Eternal Drinks, I'm known for my Basic Land reviews. Today, I am covering my second fantasy ground for MC, Reach Adventure 1: Marooned on Marduk! You can get the set here: I managed to find some B&R copies of this set to buy when it first came out. Everything I thought I needed then is here, so no complaints I'm afraid. I actually picked up this set the first time I played a game of MC, and I'm really happy with the results. It's a straightforward theme, it's a great concept, and it's a damn fun set to play with a great mechanic. This set is a pretty close 2-of-2 for me. I'm not sure if I've mentioned it anywhere else, but The Old School experience is so important to me. It was a breath of fresh air when it came out to hear and feel the little buzz of new cards coming out. As a result, when the MC line was released, I was prepared for a new dimension in Magic, even if I didn't realise it at the time. I'm not sure if I've mentioned this yet, but I live in a house with a flatmate. It's honestly one of the best things that's ever happened to me in Magic; they're both big fantasy football fans, and it's really helped keep a passion for the game alive. They convinced me I should play MC when I was sick with a cold one day, and I've probably played that set more than any other set since. We're usually pretty busy when it comes to attending guests at home, so we never really have a lot of time to spend in the store running our sections as efficiently as we'd like. However, I managed to cleanse some of the cards, the vast majority of which I
