btns.forEach(function(btn){

---

btn.addEventListener('click',
    function(ev) {
ev.preventDefault(); alert(this);
}); });
```

Now I tried to move the alert to the btn's function itself and it worked!

var btns = document.querySelectorAll('.delete-btns-div');
    btns.forEach(function(btn) {
    btn.addEventListener('click',
        function(ev) {
ev.preventDefault(); alert(this);
}); });
```

So why does this happen? And why can't I access btn from inside the loop? A: Your element is not a current node when you check this inside the callback, it is a reference (and references are passed by value). You should store it like this:

var btns = document.querySelectorAll('.d

---

```
delete-btns-div');
btns.forEach(function(btn){ var
    that = this;
    btn.addEventListener('click',
        function(ev){
ev.preventDefault(); alert(that);

However, you should use event delegation instead of adding event handlers to all elements. It will be more efficient and save you some memory by not being added to each element. Q: Grabbing data from a website with
