540-099-2112 Microscopic Cystoid Macular Edema (CME) in Pediatric Non-Hodgkin Lymphoma (NHL): A Review of Our Experience. Although the incidence of ocular complications in children with non-Hodgkin lymphoma (NHL) is well documented, there are few reports of microscopic cystoid macular edema (CME) in this patient population. The aim of the study was to review our experience with CME in children with NHL. We conducted a chart review of all patients (n = 30) who presented with CME between 2005 and 2016 to the New York Eye and Ear Infirmary of Mount Sinai, a tertiary referral eye center. Twenty-nine patients (97%) were diagnosed with extranodal NHL: the majority was Burkitt's lymphoma (n = 26, 87%). All patients received systemic chemotherapy. Eight (26%) patients developed CME and were treated with vitrectomy to remove the vitreous. All eyes, with the exception of one, developed bilateral CME. Thirty-two percent of CME episodes occurred at the time of the initial systemic chemotherapy and 64% after additional systemic chemotherapy, i.e., after the completion of therapy. There were 2 instances of vitreous hemorrhage and 1 retinal detachment. Patients received an average of 6.3 (range: 0-19) vitrectomies, with a final visual acuity of 20/20 or better in 32% of eyes. CME is a common complication of systemic NHL in children. The most common cause of CME in this group of patients is the induction of vinca alkaloids. After systemic therapy for NHL, CME can result in permanent visual impairment. Early detection and treatment can prevent further visual morbidity.Q: Get color of xamarin forms controls I want to change the color of my labels and other controls.
